Affective Domain Activity #7: Dare to Disagree

Watch the following 13-minute video:

Most people instinctively avoid conflict, but as Margaret Heffernan shows us, good disagreement is central to progress. She illustrates (sometimes counterintuitively) how the best partners aren't echo chambers — and how great research teams, relationships and businesses allow people to deeply disagree.

Write or type your response to the following:

- 1. Briefly summarize two stories the author provides to support why it is important to "Dare to Disagree."
- 2. In one sentence, what is the point of the article? Are you surprised by this?
- 3. Provide an example from your own life that supports the thesis of this article.
- 4. Based on this article, what advice would you give a classmate who says, "I think the answer on the board is incorrect. Should I say something?"

Closure: You will be responding to each other either as a class discussion.
